Mr. Corwin spent his summer vacation on Maui, and seems to have occupied it mostly at his usual pastime of chaining the mountains and valleys, and showing, in some instances, how little people know about the distances they travel. We give his measurements:

From Labaina to Wailuku (over the mountain)..... 20 miles From Walinku to Kulepolepo,

From Kalepolepo to Makee's,

From Cupt. Hebron's to the summit of Haleakala... om Maliko Landing to Sayre's store in Makawao... ? but we give the estimated distances:

The last two routes were measured two years ago. The following have not yet been measured by him,

The distance from Lahaina ta Makawao or Ulupalakua has generally been estimated at 50 miles, and the sheriff and constables on that Island, when dispatched on official business to those points, have usually been paid for that distance. Their fees will be reduced hereafter in proportion to the ascertained listance, at which they are quite indignant. Few who have traveled over the mountains from Lahnina to Wailuku, would suppose the distance to be only twenty miles. The Coming War in Europe. The San Francisco Times, commenting on the warlike aspect in Europe, has the following:

ANOTHER WAR CLOUD IN EUROPE.-It is evident from the tenor of our dispatches that another difficulty has arisen between France and Prussia. The quarrel seems to have grown out of the Schleswig-Holstein matter, Prussia refusing the retrocession of certain provinces taken from Denmark during the late war, and France backing up the claims of Denmark. It is at least probable that a war will this time take place, and it is stated on the continent to be looked upon as certain. When the Luxemburg question was settled it was the general opinion in Europe that a collision between the two powers was merely postponed, neither party being quite ready, and Napoleon having the Great Exposition on his hands. Though a peace was then patched up, military preparations have never been suspended for an tant in either country, and both have in various ways evinced their belief that an ultimate appeal to arms was inevitable. Since that time both parties have put themselves into nearly perfect fighting trim. Prussia has made great progress in the consolidation of her new acquisitions and the organization of her administration, while Napoleon has made his exhibition a success, has entertained the sovereigns at his capital, and in all probability completed his disposi-tions for the struggle. The attitude of both parties is such that the war may at any time be precipitated upon the slightest pretext. The real issue is European supremacy, and it may be fought out as well upon this Schleswig-Holstein matter as upon any other. A successful war can alone enable Napoleon to regain the prestige which in various ways he has recently lost, quiet domestic dissatisfaction and secure a fair chance for his son; while if Prussia would carry ut the grand plans of national aggrandisement which are no doubt completed by her King and his advisers, she must brook no interference.

The two nations are like well matched and skillful swordsmen, watching for an opportunity to strike that Chile and Peru have accepted, with certain with advantage. The blow, when it comes, will be reservations, the proffered mediation of the United sudden and hard. Assuming a war to be imminent, it is impossible to tell with which side success will The London Times, in speaking of the execution rest; as besides the difficulty of estimating the relaof Maximilian says; "The time will come when tive strength of the combatants, we cannot tell what may be the secret understanding of the European powers, or whom the struggle may involve. From appearances, though it seems as if every advantage was now with France, Prussia will fight at a greater disadvantage on the Schleswig-Holstein question than on that of Luxemburg, as it does not so strongly enlist the German feeling, and would more directly interest Northern Europe against her. Supposing, moreover, the fighting abilities of the two nations to be the same, Napoleon is still undoubtedly the ablest sovereign, if not the ablest statesman in Europe, and has had ample opportunity to effect an overpowering alliance. Russia wants Turkey; Italy wants Rome; Austria is still sore over her defeat of last summer, and Denmark, with Sweden, who sympathizes with ner, hates and fears Prussia. This situation gives Napoleon ample scope for the display of his peculiar abilities, and it is probable that he has availed himself of them to the utmost. The recent visit of the Czar to Paris and the cordinatty which seemed to exist between the two Emperors, were regarded in Europe as significant. The attitude which the Russian Government is said to have assumed on this question gives color to the belief that an understanding exists.

While all war is to be deprecated, not only for its effects upon those immediately concerned, but as an niury to mankind at large, that now threatened may be regarded as one sure to come, and which it is better to have over quickly. This constant dread of a European war is almost as disastrous as war itself. Nearly seven-eighths of the revenues of the European States are now devoted to military purposes, and there is no prespect of this great burden being lifted from the people until the questions which constantly threaten the peace of Europe are in some way settled; and, in nearly any event, the issue of such a war must hasten the triumph of liberal principles and the
